Work has always been more than a means of earning a living. It shapes identities, communities, and the rhythm of everyday life. Traditionally, the working class has been associated with people whose livelihoods depended on physical labour in industry, crafts, services, agriculture, and fishing. Yet as society evolves, so too does the nature of work.

Modernization and technological progress have transformed many occupations. Jobs once defined by strenuous physical effort are gradually disappearing, replaced by automated systems and computer-controlled machinery. In many industries, the physical presence of workers has been reduced to a fraction of what it once was.

These changes are reflected in the photographs submitted to this exhibition. Many authors were drawn to scenes of demanding physical labour, capturing moments from industrial and craft environments, as well as the enduring traditions of farming and fishing. Through their lenses, they preserve not only professions but also ways of life that are slowly changing or, in some cases, fading from view.

For the jury, the selection process was both a responsibility and a privilege. The awarded and accepted photographs stand out for different reasons: some through innovative visual approaches, others through powerful storytelling or the elegance of simplicity. Several images go beyond the individual worker and reveal the wider environment in which they live and work. Whether set in a factory, a workshop, a field, or a home, these photographs offer a deeper understanding of the people portrayed and the social and cultural landscapes that shape their lives.

Above all, the selected works remind us that behind every task, every product, and every service stands a human story – one of skill, perseverance, dignity, and dedication.

On behalf of the jury, I warmly congratulate all authors whose photographs were accepted and awarded. May your passion for photography continue to inspire meaningful stories and bring you many future successes and moments of creative fulfillment.
